THE SEA-SHORE.

HOW happy these children are, playing on the sands in the pleasant sea breeze. Anna is looking for her sister Martha, who is busily engaged, at a distance, watching the movements of a curious little animal which she has found in one of the pools. This little creature, the soldier-crab, has one half of his body like a lobster, with a tail like a snail. This soft tail requires to be protected by a shell, but no shell has he by nature, so that he has to take possession of the o'd empty shell of a whelk, or some other creature. When two take a fancy to the same shell, they fight for it, which has given them the name of soldier crabs. Their eyes are on stalks, and instead of putting their mouths down to their food like other animals, they take a bit in one claw, and put it neatly into their mouths, as a monkey would do. It is most amusing to watch their movements; and Martha cannot leave the place, though Anna is calling loudly to her.

Children have you ever looked for the numberless wonderful and amusing things to be seen in a single pool of salt water?

THE HEATHEN MOTHER.

SEE that heathen mother stand
Where the sacred current flows;
With her own maternal hand
'Mid the waves her babe she throws.

Hark! I hear the piteous scream;
Frightful monsters seize their prey,
Or the dark and bloody stream
Bears the struggling child away.

Send, O send the Bible there,
Let its precepts reach the heart;
She may then her children spare—
Act the mother's tender part.
